

Hi, mate! I've come across your question while browsing this forum. As I'm an (avid) seasoned traveller myself, I'd be happy to share my knowledge and give you a piece of advice.

Surely, the choice between Edinburgh and Glasgow is a tough one. Yet, I'll try and weigh up the options.¹

Talking about the Scottish capital, I can say it boasts innumerable places of interest. Some of them include: the National Museum of Scotland that can't leave anyone unamazed thanks to its Dolly the cloned sheep; the Scottish National Gallery housing works of Raphael and Botticelli; the Royal Botanic Garden, a giant lily pond of which is a sight to behold.

On the other hand, it'd be wrong to say Glasgow has less to take pride in. For example, the Kelvingrove Art Gallery and Museum's dinosaurs are known for having mesmerized people for decades. What's more, visiting the Glasgow Science Centre and the Riverside Museum has become a long-standing tradition with tourists.

'But which one is a better destination?' you might ask. Well, there's no obvious answer. However, having first-hand knowledge of the cities, I advise you to go to Edinburgh. Firstly, it has a more advanced subway system, which makes it (comfortable) convenient² to get around. Secondly, it is a place where nature flourishes since local authorities care for trees and fund the upkeep of numerous parks.

So, Glasgow is wonderful, of course, but Edinburgh's splendours are what I'd recommend you to see first.

Quite a nice online message 😊

- share your experience of visiting the cities — ALMOST DONE; I would recommend adding more details that prove that the author really visited the cities. So far, there's only one indication ('having first-hand knowledge of the cities') of visiting, and the rest is presented in a rather impersonal way, like quoting a tourist guide. An example of a more personal way: 'My personal favorite is the Palace of Holyroodhouse. I was charmed enough to take some photos, which is kind of illegal' (here not only the place is introduced, but the author's personal experience is shared, too)
- mention 3 places of interest in each city — DONE
- give your recommendation and provide at least 2 reasons for it — DONE

¹ I wouldn't divide it into a different paragraph (I'd keep it in the first one)

² usually, 'comfortable' is about how the body feels: clothes, armchair, etc.; convenient is about the ease of using something, like in your context
