Missing paragraphs:

A However, whereas my grandmother felt that my mother should only follow in their footsteps if she really wanted to, my grandfather was determined that she should teach for a living – so she did.

B Apart from this, she might well have had problems raising the necessary capital, and if she'd asked her father to lend it to her, he probably wouldn't have done it.

C She'd actually like to have become a pharmacist and run her own business, but she wasn't sufficiently qualified for it.

D For most of her working life my mother taught chemistry in a secondary school. She always said the reason she had entered the teaching profession was because her father had virtually forced her to do so.

E I think my mother resented my grandfather for the pressure he had put on her, and she always encouraged me to make my own decisions.

F Her parents were both teachers, though she herself had no intention of becoming one.

G I did – and now I work as a teacher, and my son does, too!
