People will not commit crimes if they know that the punishment will be horrible regardless of the seriousness of the crime (a death sentence for shoplifting, for example). Or maybe they will not commit crimes if they know that the punishment will be impossible to avoid (CCTV records every step of theirs, for example). So, speaking of crime prevention, what is more effective: the severity of punishment or its inevitability?

Write 250–280 words expressing your opinion on the topic and backing it up with arguments and/or examples.
